

This first book is from a collection of novels and short stories involving real lives across continents and cultures. It addresses the general subject of most of them—finding and keeping love in our lives, in the form of intimate relationships, with lots of disappointments.

Unfortunately, that is a common place experience across cultures and continents. The most significant symbol of the story, involving the metaphor of diamonds, was obviously meant to portray how women view love. This work of fiction, based on the events of a young woman's real life, explores the quest for a real relationship. It is meant to span across cultures, while depicting the disappointments, shock, or hurts that people encounter as they try to find an everlasting relationship and love. As people define the term marriage, they focus on their views of love, as well as what they want or desire. This is an exhilarating piece of writing that portrays that a real relationship of marriage requires similar values—regardless of race and culture. This is a significant shift from the romantic idea that is so dominant in our culture but unsustainable in real life. To rely exclusively on romance does not fulfill all one's needs; it leads you to fall into unconsciousness. There are other aspects of affection worth cultivating—devotion, friendship, commitment, trust, reliability, unselfishness, support, lack of greed. Love is something that all cultures need and want. When they get it, it's totally outside of their control when they get what they feel they desire. In our narcissistic culture of surfaces a vast majority of men tend to feel or believe that the world revolves around them and that they are the center of attraction. In this modern world, in some cultures, men are nurtured to be promiscuous and it is tolerated. Thank God for the women who have determined that it will no longer be tolerated and the men who are beginning to recognize that suppression and maltreatment of African women, male promiscuity and polygamy cripple the society. We have come a long way. We will maintain a forward progression.
