

Conrad and Turgenev: Towards the Real (Conrad, Eastern and Western Perspectives)

The twentieth volume in the Conrad: Eastern and Western Perspectives series, Conrad and Turgenev: Towards the Real offers a comparative analysis of Joseph Conrads and Ivan Turgenevs output and focuses on their outlooks and ideas concerning art, personality, and history. The analysis is based on Conrads and Turgenevs major novels such as Lord Jim, Nostromo, Almayers Folly, And Outcast of the Islands, The Return, Victory, The Secret Agent and Rudin, Home of the Gentry, One the Eve, Fathers and Sons, Smoke, as well as selected novellas, short stories, essays and letters. The affinities and differences between the two writers are discussed within the framework of realism and modernism. Main problems addressed are the relation between reality and representation in the two authors major works; the concept of the self and its duality, and the pessimistic vision of history devoid of purpose. The study is intended to highlight the affinities between Conrad and Turgenev, to acquaint the readers with those aspects of Turgenevs output that form the context for Conrads oeuvre, to trace the echoes of Turgenevs aesthetics and worldview in Conrads texts and to show how Conrad, a disciple of great realist masters, balanced his new modernist awareness against Turgenev who relies on the framework of realism.
